When Sciflyer released their debut LP, Fair Weather Karma, to an unsuspecting public in July 2003, an astounded Austin Chronicle dubbed it "a jet-fueled cruise into the sunset." Appropriate to a band whose creations originate, according to guitarist/vocalist Steve Kennedy, "somewhere in the ether."

Part space-rock, part shoegaze and thoroughly otherworldly, Sciflyer craft layers of droning noise, liquid enough to drown in. Kennedy's hushed vocals evoke Flying Saucer Attack mainman David Pearce, while his dissonant guitar textures resurrect the glorious noise generated by shoegaze fixtures like Ride and Swervedriver. As the Orlando Weekly noted, "It's nice to see a previously stunted genre moving forward again."

With their new EP, The Age of Lovely Intimate Things, the group take another small step for man, and a giant leap for mankind. Consisting of only five tracks, yet weighing in at a lengthy 31 minutes, this latest offering ends up being like a compendium of two "lost singles" (and their B-sides) that the band recorded during their two year pseudo-hiatus in drummer-limbo. Songs like "The Nation," "The Same Thing Goes For Christmas" and the Pop Renaissance 7" version of "Like An Ion" are made to order for college airplay, while the 13 minute opus "Never Come Down" promises to become a new shoegazer classic anthem. Please join us as we usher in The Age of Lovely, Intimate Things!
